Beyond the promontory of Cape Verde, the coast again becomes flat and low, and the mouth of the Gambia forms a broad estuary with flat shores, which is evidently the chasm or wide opening of the sea next mentioned by Hanno. It was here that they first saw the fires, which afterwards figure so prominently in their narrative. The distance from thence to the deep gulf called the Western Horn⁶ leads us to identify the latter with the bay or gulf of 1 Flumen Bambotum, croeodilis ct hippopntamis refertum. Polyb. ap. Plin. V. i. 10. The statements of Polybius in this passage will be examined in a future chapter. - Note E, p. 335.
