As Miiller and Henslow have already observed, the Hive bee does not explode the flower, but inserts its proboscis obliquely over the basal processes and not between them. It is necessary to produce explosion for an insect to insert its proboscis between these basal processes;--any outward movement imparted to them is imparted to the combining processes, and the flower explodes. Miiller attributed the work of fertilisation to butterflies, but never saw the act. Urban disqualifies these insects on account of the flexibility of their probosces; and my observations lead to the same view. I have watched several hundred separate butterfly visits, often at very close distances, and have never seen these insects cause any explosion. Bombus generally sucks like Apis, sometimes visiting the flower first on one side, and then on the other, like a Dicentra flower. But on onevery hot afternoon I observed B. hortorum in the act of exploding the flowers in great numbers, and on two occasions I have seen Apis deliberately exploding the flowers. I have not seen the calyx bitten through by Bombus, but such has been recorded When the flower is exploded the stamens free themselves with a jerk which scatters the pollen<sup>2</sup>, some of which will adhere to the insect and some may fall into neighbouring flowers. If the stigma strikes the insect s body but obtains...
