Cloth, price $4.00 net. William Wood Company, Publishers, New York, 1917. We all know that we have to eat to live, but how many of us know why our diet should consist of this, that or the other thing, and how we may obtain the best results from a properly balanced ration? How many of us know the exact composition of the food entering into the dietary of ourselves or ot our patients We are free to confess that we have much to learn in this connection, and after reading the book now under consideration, wo believe we have the key-note to the situation. The author not only tells us how to employ foods to the best advantage, but in addition gives us a clue relative to their composition. In fact, it is more than a clue, for the whole story is told, and in a very interesting manner. The work is based upon fact rather than theory, and so is practical in its handling of the subject. Being...
