Even for the factories where time rates predominate, the presentation of rates is made difficult because of the frequent changes during the period under consideration. Many of the women for whom records were secured had three or more different rates during this time. For this reason the rates that predominated in each employee s working period are presented. In the two smallest factories, Xos. 6 and 7, all of the employees were on time rates. And in one of the mediumsized factories, No. 5, a majority of the employees were paid a weekly wage. Predominating rates for time workers in these firms are shown in Table 4. The general trend of rate increases in these establishments during the period covered in the investigation is shown in Table 5. From this it appears that the proportion of workers with...
