Based on 30 years of research and applied work with teams and organizational development by the author, this updated classical guide--now in its highly revised 3rd Edition--shows you how to plan, start-up, facilitate, and close out efficient and effective collaborative meetings. Mining Group Gold features: An incisive analysis of the staggering cost of meetings in terms of time and money; The tightly interlinked relationship between primary and secondary facilitation; The six major considerations for planning group meetings--starting with the decision about whether to have a meeting in the first place; Blueprints for designing an effective PDORA (Purpose, Desired Outcomes, Roles and Agenda) that produces a collaborative structure; Tactics for dealing with (and defusing when necessary) disruption, differences, and confusion to make a diversity of viewpoints a valuable team asset; Ways for channeling participants' emotions into a positive force; Expert guidance on using technologies like virtual collaboration as a catalyst for unlocking your team's collaborative brain power.
